Suspected Zoo Attack Dogs Caught

Breaking News

News 10

The two dogs suspected of attacking and killing rodent-like creatures known as Patagonian Cavies at the Potter Park Zoo were caught Monday afternoon.

One dog was found in a home on Donora Street in Lansing. The other was found running loose. Authorities say the owner of both dogs is out of town, possibly on military assignment. Apparently, the dogs were left in the car of a friend of the owner.

The dogs were identified by Potter Park officials and are now in the custody of Ingham County Animal Control officers. One dog is described as a mixed breed female and the other is a male beagle mix.

Animal control officers are continuing their investigation.
