A 39-year-old Austin woman reported a dog bite Wednesday from a black lab, which attacked her while she was delivering groceries to a home, according to Austin Police Chief Paul Philipp.

Philipp said the woman was dropping off food and other items to a 35-year-old woman at a Ninth Avenue Southwest home, when the lab lunged toward the woman's right arm and bit her, causing puncture wounds.

After reporting it to her boss, the alleged victim went to Austin Medical Center and filed a police report, Philipp stated.

The dog's owner said she was aware of the situation when confronted by police later that day, and was able to produce rabies tags from 2005, according to the police report.

No charges can be filed, Philipp said.
