A Boulder woman was taken to the hospital Wednesday after she reported being attacked by a dog at the Tantra Lake apartments, 755 W. Moorhead Circle, at about 2:40 p.m.

The woman, whose name and age aren't known, told officers the large Weimaraner was running in and out of an open apartment when it attacked, said police spokeswoman Sarah Huntley.

Initial reports indicated she suffered a large gash to her behind. Huntley said the extent of the woman's injuries was not clear, but the victim was released from Boulder Community Hospital late Wednesday afternoon.

Humane Society of Boulder Valley animal control supervisor Janee Teague said the incident remained under investigation, although the dog's owner could face charges of owning an aggressive animal.

A man at the apartment Wednesday declined to give his name or comment about the incident, but he told Boulder police officers the door was closed when he left and questioned whether the woman was trying to get into his home.

Police officers at the scene described the dog involved in the alleged attack as being "as tall as a doorknob."
